BEGINNING OF THE LAST WEEK OF THE SPECIAL SESSION.

▲ Day of Rest-Army Affairs -An India: Dude-Rumors of Cabinet Meetings. Edward D. Clark Dead -Washington News Notes.

WASHINGTON, March 24.- No astonish ment was expressed when it war learned that ex-senator George H. Pendleton of Ohio, was nominated to be misister to Germany. It has been known here among Pendletons friends for some time that he could have any position in diplomatic service he wanted. President Cleveland has long had a very elevated opinion of ex-Senator Pendleton, and this has recently been in creased by the opposition of John R. McLean It has also been known for several days that McLean had been snubbed by the president and sat down upon by Senator Payne. The appointment of Pendleton is indorsed by everybody except a few of Mc-Lean's friends, and the senate promptly confirmed it. The compliment considered just and it is universally remarked that Pendleton will fill the position with the very highest degree of credit. There are but four first-class missions. They are to England, Germany, France and Russia. The salary is $17,500, with numerous secretaries, clerks, interpreters, and perquisites.

to a reward from his party. He began public life in 1854, as a member of the state senate of Ohio. He represented Ohio in the national congress from 1857 to 1864, when he was the democratic candidate for vice president on the ticket headed by George B. McClellan; was a candidate for governor of Ohio in 1869, and in 1870 took his seat in the United States senate. In private life Mr. Pendleton is held in the highest esteem. His wife is a lady of rare accomplishments. She was the daughter of Francis Scott Key, the author of "The Star Spangled Banner," and a niece of the great chief justice of the United States supreme court, Roger P. Taney. Their home is at Cincinnati, where Mr. Pendleton was

ROBERT M'LANE.

Robert McLane, of Maryland, is well qualified by association and experience to fill the position to which he has just been appointed by President Cleveland. The McLanes of Maryland are among the first families in an honorary way in the United States. Allen McLane was a distinguished revolutionary officer. His son Louis represented Maryland in congress for ten years prior to 1837, when he was chosen senator. He was minister to England under Gen. Jackson, and afterwards secretary of state till June, 1834. Robert, the present leading representative of the family, possesses in a marked degree the talents of his ancestors; he has taken an active part in the politics of his state, filling acceptably every position to which he has been chosen.

WASHINGTON, March 24.-The beginning of what is expected to be the last week of the "special" session of the senate opened clear and bright, but decidedly wintry. A heavy snow fell and a sharp, crisp wind from the northwest, bowled around the capitol building, which apperently caused the senators to forget what the session was called for.

Mr. Hendricks directed the chaplain to proceed with prayers, but there were only four senators present.

Before the journal was read Mr. Miller, of New York, moved that the senate adjourn, which motion, he said, was the only one in order, there being no quorum present. Messes. Vest and Sawyer expressed the hope that the motion would not prevail. At this moment Messra, Ingails, Edmunds and Morrill entered the chamber. Mr. Miller withdraw his motion and the chair di rected the reading of the journal, after which they proceeded with the consideration of the

to prevent "leaks," and an additional door-keeper was stationed in the lobby leading to the reporters' gallery, and all employes of the senate had rigid instructions not to tail with outsiders and carefully scrutinize al persons entering the reporters' gallers. The sure no executive secret shall reach the en of the public. A resolution which was adopted Saturda extending an injunction of secrecy units shall become public by the proclamation the president, has created a good deal of coment, and in a leader the Post says:

"It is impossible that the senate should have been also should be a senate sho kept pace with the rapacity of the press,"a enquires "Why may not the senate acsituation to the extent of furnishing the palie day by day, with such synopsis of ats. tions and discussions in secret sessions as non-not conflict with conscientions obligations to foreign powers, or condidential interests." I suggests that this is is all correspondents ask, and is nothing but what the senate could grant without any compromise of its dignity, and concludes by intimating that the star chamber process is unworthy of the American senate.

In executive session, the subject under discussion was a supplemental treaty between the United States and Mexico, proposing the rehearing of the Weil-la Abra Mexican claims. The only interest in this treaty is centered in the respective claimants to who it is alleged money is due for seizures made upon property by Mexico. The matter was once arranged by treaty, but Mexico claimed that fraud and forgery had been resorted to by Americans, hence a new treaty. Owing to the strict enforcement of the new rule on preserving the senate secrets, all that could be asceron the subject was that elaborate speeches in favor of a ratification of this treaty were made by Senators Morgan and Voorhees.

An Indian Dude.

WASHINGTON, March 24.—Red Cloud is a happy Indian. He is "going the white man's" road at a rapid rate. He secured a postoffice for his agency, and he struck the Indian commission for some civilized clothes. This touched Mr. Price in a soft spot. He could never bring himself to look with satisfaction on the red man's outlandish toggery, and when the chief showed a disposition to shed nis blankets and leggings Mr. Price was pleased to give him an order on a clothier. Red Cloud came out in all the glory of a thiny black suit, white shirt, high hat and several bright-colored handkerchiefs.

Slightly Off.

WASHINGTON, March 24 .- The hotel gossips have been much exercised to learn what was done at a cabinet meeting which they said had been held at the white house. The fact is there was no cabinet gathering, formal or informal, and therefore no consideration of urgent business. There is nothing in the report about the English mission, except talk among Mr. Pendleton's friends and opposers.

The Birtha y Feast - Princely Prepara tions-Paris Potpourri-German Gleanings-Mexico Melange-Italian Items-Foreign Notes.

BRRLIN, March 24. - The enthusiasm and demonstration of loyalty exhibited or the emperor's eighty-eighth birthday, have never been equalled. The city was decorated with flags, and the monument to Frederick the Great was hung with flowers provided at the expense of Bleichroder, the banker. The emperor had a severe cold and was very hoarse, and although the usual reception was given he did not make his customary speech.

The prince of Wales were the uniform of a Prussian hussar. He looked splendid, like a Prussian soldier, which is the highest compliment that can be made here.

The emperor gave a dinner of 200 covers in honor of his guests, to which Mr. Kasson, the American ambasador, was invited. All the schools throughout Germany celebrated the birthday. Addresses were made, premiums were given and school holiday followed. The emperor enjoys a wonderful freshness. He personally does the honors to all guests, driving around to half a dozen hotels and places where they lodge. It would be no small piece of work for a much younger man to see many hundreds of people in one day.

The presence of the Prince of Wales, who is always a welcome guest in Berlin on account of his good natured disposition, is looked upon as a political event of great signiffcance. Though Prince Bismarck asserted only a few days ago that politics must not be influenced by dynastic considerations, if must be admitted that the friendly relation existing between members of European dynasties is at least promotive of the interest of international politics. The late differences between Germany and England would certainly not have been so satisfactorily settled if it had not been for the active sympathy of the emperor for the English royal family. This friendship dates from the time when Kaiser William, as prince of Prussia, lived in London in a sort of banishment. The correspondence between him and the prince consort, published a few years ago, is a beautiful testimony of the friendship established at that time and which exists to this day between the emperor and Queen Victoria. In the coming year important documents will be published showing this intimacy between the two dynasties. The emperor is very fond of the Prince of Wales, as is also the crown prince. At the court dinner the emperor announced the betrothal of his grandson, the hereditary grand duke of Baden, with the Princess Hilda, of Nassau, daughter of the depossessed the bridegroom for robbing him of his land in 1866. It is assumed, however, that the rich duke has now made lasting peace with the new order of things in the German em-

But far more interesting than the case of M. Lassalle is that of Mme. Francey, a provincial beauty, who a few days hence will be tried at Tonnerre for shooting a Lovelace who had pestered her with his attentions. The affair is so full of dreadful details that it is difficult to touch it without offending readers. Mme. ### JONATHAN P. HECK'S WILL.

A Descendant of Barbara Heck Bequeaths Some Valuable Church Relies.

NEW YORK, March 24 - The will of Jonathan P. Heck, who died a few days ago in Mount Vernon, which has just been admitted to probate in the surrogate's court at White Plains, contains the curious bequest of a barrel of tinware to a daughter and of a "Barbars Heck candlestick" to his son, Charles W. Heck. The candlestick is a family heirloom of methodism in America. Jonathan Heck was a direct descendant of Barbara and Paul Heck, whose church work in this city forms the most interesting chapter in the history of methodism. This candlestick is is one of the old style brass affairs of the last century, and it was used by Barbara Heck, so the family tradition says, to light the pul-pit in the old John Street Methodist church upon the evening of the dedication by Philip Embury, September 30, 1768. It has been in the family ever since. Mrs. Heek and her husband landed in this city on the 10th of August, 1760. Philip Embury, her cousin. had preceded her three years, having been sent by John Wesley to the New World to preach Methodism. His small flock soon scattered, and when Mrs. Heck arrived she found no church, no society, no preacher, She used every means at her command to excite a religious revival and failed. Desperate at her ill success she one day found a party of young men playing cards in Mr Embury's house. She seized the cards and threw them into the fire. Then she commanded Embury to get up and preach the gospel there and then. Embury dwelt in a humble cottage in Barrack street, duke. The bride is a sweet and excellently trained fraulein, now in her twenty-first to the street and pulled in four peryear. The match is one of inclination, but sons and directed Embury to preach to was assented to with great reluctance by the them. This was the nucleus of Methodism in duke, who cannot forgive the grandfather of New York. With the assistance of the historical Capt. Thomas Webb, of the British army, who used to exhort in his uniform, with his sword in his hand, the society grew until they were able to rent a loft in William street. Embury, Webb and Mrs. Heck held tri-weekly meetings. From this grew the famous John Street Methodist church, Mrs. Heck being the person who raised all the funds and designed the structure which was built by Embury, who was a carpenter. Mr. Heck in his will also bequeaths a number of love-feast tackets to his son which were used in this old church. Having finished her work in New York Mrs. Heck went to Canada, where she organized another society, and died there soon after, Mr. Jonathan Heek was always a most ardent church

By the Promptitude of Firemen and Po-

The flames originated in the rooms occupied by Mrs. Christina Harman an I her three children. The mother had gone to work and left the three children alone in the rooms. They had been burning paper and thus set fire to the furniture.

An alarm was promptly sounded, and the teachers with great difficulty succeeded in keeping the children from becoming panicstricken. News of the fire spread rapidly, and soon the building was surrounded by the frenzied parents and relatives, who tried to force an entrance to rescue the children. They jammed all the passages to the structure when the police arrived and drove them

The firemen soon had the fire under control, confining the flames to the basements in which it originated. The teachers units in saying that but for the prompt arrival of the police and firemen a terrible panic, in which hundreds of children would have lost their lives, must have ensued, as fully 600 children were in the school. Fortunately, with the exception of one fireman who fell from a ladder to the cellar and was badly injured, no one was hurt.
